Douglas Adams

(author, Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy):

 "I've come up with a set of rules that describe our reactions to technologies:

1. Anything that is in the world when you're born is normal and ordinary and is just a natural part of the way the world works.

2. Anything that's invented between when you're fifteen and thirty-five is new and exciting and revolutionary and you can probably get a career in it.

3. Anything invented after you're thirty-five is against the natural order of things."

Radio was once new and disruptive

Radio advertising promised to redeem the farmer by raising his social status to equal that of the city dweller

"What these people need is radio."

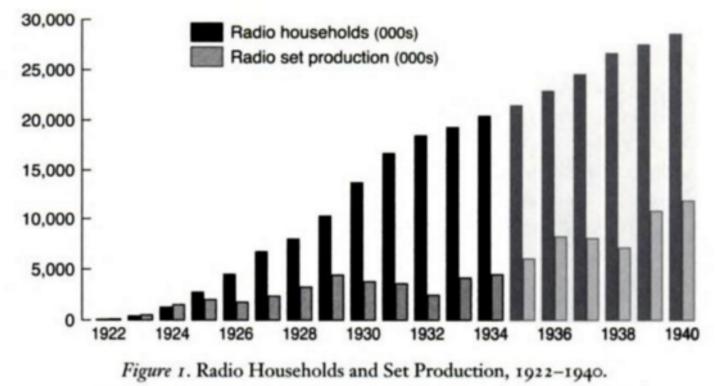

Patnode R. 'What These People Need Is Radio': New Technology, the Press, and Otherness in 1920s America. Technology And Culture [serial online]. 2003;(2):285. Available from:

The radio telephone, it seems to me, is primarily an invention for the benefit of women. Its greatest achievement is banishing isolation. . . . Isolation, whether mental or geographical, has been the cause of much of woman's restlessness and has done more to retard her progress than any other one factor. . . . I am sure the radiophone will assume a social significance which women will be quick to grasp and employ to their own advantage.⁴²
